

CITIZENSHIP AND BIOPOLITICS

By Gertjon Çobo (Doctoral Candidate in Philosophy, University of Tirana)

The participation of an individual in the state is often affected by the definition that we have for the man. The way we determine the man in the context of citizenship can have negative consequences. If we change this definition this may also exclude individuals to limit the joy of fundamental rights.

Frequently the citizens' rights is associated with the principle of jus sanguinis. This principle can produce conflicts which arise when there are tensions in countries of origin of the subjects. Bio – politics language not lacking in discussions or higher levels. It is enough to pay attention to the political discourse of the key figures in Albania and will easily find the discriminatory elements, marginality associated with anti – origin of potential enemies. This paper aims to shed light on the relationship between citizenship and bio – politics.

Keywords: Bio – politics, Citizenship, Rights, Anthropology, Politics

Bibliography:

- Agamben G. (2005), Çelnaja: njeriu, kafsha, politika: pasuar nga tri ese biopolitike, Tiranë: Zenit
- Plasari A. (1999), Biopolitika: a ekziston në Shqipëri?, Tiranë: Phoenix
- Canivez P. (2001), Të edukohet qytetari, Pejë: Dukagjini
- Jean-Jacques Rousseau. (2007), Origjina e pabarazisë mes njerëzve, Tiranë: Almera
- Thomas – Robert Malthus, (2009), Ese mbi parimin e popullsisë, Tiranë: Helga's secrets
- Esposito R. (2008), Bio: Biopolitics and Philosophy, University of Minnesota Press
- Lemke T. (2011), Bio-politics, an advanced introduction, New York University Press