Purpose: Respect for the right of information, provides secure results on good governance, as well as for a healthy society and less corrupt. This obligation relates to the constitutional right to have the Albanian public administration bodies to serve the citizens, and to contribute to the respect of freedoms and their rights.

Research Methodology/Approach: This project/survey is realized through a theoretical treatment of the right to information based on national legislation, as well as theoretical confrontation with practice of this right where it applies, through a community survey in the municipality of Vlora.

Findings: Having dealt extensively legal mechanisms for the realization of the right of citizens to information, the obligations of public administration bodies to publish rules and procedures for granting and research information, while legally sanctioned by the secret state information, conclude that the information is a permanent service of public administration, it's a functional task, measurable and controllable.

The implementation of this obligation depends on the obligation of public administration bodies in view of the citizen.

Keywords: public administration, procedures, appeal, the right to information, obligation.
